

Transparency International Russia (TI-R) is co-coordinating projects and activities to raise awareness about corruption, including monitoring activities that assess government or private sector compliance with policy commitments as well as procurement, privatization and election financing. In addition, TI-R is intended to service and benefit NGOs, the private sector, media, policy makers as well as the general public by providing the knowledge necessary to understand corruption and act against it.

The TI-R Anti-Corruption Resource Center provides up to date information, including best practices, research and anti-corruption legislation. It also raises awareness about the scope and impact of corruption on Russia's development. The ACRC in Russia serves as:

- a vehicle to raise public awareness, launch campaigns, disseminate know how and tools
- a meeting place for workshops and roundtables
- an instrument to build a sustainable anti-corruption network

Services of the ACRC are open to representatives of NGOs, students, researchers, journalists, public officials and others engaged in researching corruption related issues. They include:

- library and media archive with downloadable papers and legal documents
- access to Internet and TI's online anticorruption database, CORIS
- an email request service and a copying service
